These things are necessary for living well and dying happily (or, for a good life and a happy death). Observe that this gerund thus used often answers to the infinitive active of an English verb. Paratus ad resistendum, Eady for resistance, or ready to resist, Ad jpradcmdum emissi sunt, They were let loose to plunder. Observe also that the gerund in dum, unlike the other two, never governs a case. It would be bad Latin to say, Parati sunt ad defendendum patriam (or, ad resistendum hosti), They are ready to defend their country (or, to resist the enemy). Obs. In Quintilian we find inter agendum, in the midst of action; and Virgil speaking of young horses says, Ante domandum Ingentes toUunt animos, Before they are tamed (literally, Before the taming) they are very fiery. Similar constructions of the gerund in dum occur in the...
