Millie had told Rex several days before that he might bring with him to the kindergarten any little boy or girl who might be benefited by such a visit, and Rex, who had settled upon Jakey Hart for his guest, was finding it difficult to persuade the driver of the van to stop for his friend. The trouble was that the driver knew Jakey already and had spent a short lifetime in dodging Jakey's attentions, which ranged all the way from cobble-stones to carrots. But Rex was so insistent that Jehu finally relented and turned into the unsavory alley where Jakey and Jakey's ilk were ever to be found. Little trouble was there in finding him, either, for he had remembered his date and was waiting in readiness. Whoa! stop the hearse! he yelled huskily. This here's th stiff yer lookinfor! Whoa! I say! All aboard for the morgue! was his manner of signifying that he had climbed in among the startled young cherubs who were to be his companions for the morning. Except that they felt rather hot and conspicuous, the twins found the ride pleasant. Rex was particularly impressed with a little girl called Angela. Not only was she pretty and curlyheaded and wriggled all the time, but she slapped a little boy and made a face at him. Rex had heard of such things but had never before seen them. He was charmed. When the bunch of children arrived at the kindergarten, Miss...
