Now $EJH t$ Pi.-.-, -is constant and equals R. . $JH = RPt$. i.e. for the same conductor we have the following: --Joule s Law.--The heat generated in a given conductor is directly proportional to the square of the current, and to the time the current passes, and to the resistance of the conductor. If the current is in amperes, the resistance in ohms, and the time in seconds, the heat created is zRi joules. If the current is in absolute units, the resistance in absolute units, and the time in seconds, the heat created is i^2Ri ergs. Now it takes 4.2 joules to create 1 w.gm.CV unit of heat. Hence the heat created is $2Rr$. w.gm.C. unit, 4.2 1.e.24 $z 2Rr$ w.gm.C. unit. In a resistance of R ohms through which a current z amperes is passing, heat is created at the rate of $z 2R$ joules per sec.; i.e. the power given out in the conductor is $z 2R$ watts. To maintain this, energy must be supplied or work done at the rate of $z 2R$ watts. From this point of view the resistance of a conductor may be measured by the power required to maintain a current of 1...
